

Parenthood through whole life

Taking care of their children is a responsibility of every parent. They have to raise them, get them educated and prepared for life. But a lot of people keep doing that even when their kids become grown-ups. Should or should not parenthood be a lifetime responsibility is the theme of the following essay.

To begin with, when you are ~~making~~ <sup>making</sup> a big life decision, parents will always give you advice or support you. For example if you are getting married or changing your ~~career~~ <sup>career</sup>. Secondly, they will help you raise your children. For instance, they will gladly give you advice on parenting. Lastly, parents will always back you up financially if you need it. Given the example, a lot of parents buy their children a house when they get married.

On the other hand, parents should not back you up through your whole life. As an example, a lot of children live completely of their parents' money and that is not normal.

Finally, you can't live with your parents forever. To back up with, a lot of people keep living with their ~~parents~~ <sup>parents</sup> while they want to be alone after all those years.

Given these facts, parenthood is something that you will be responsible until the day you die. In my opinion, parents should always be there for you with a friendly advice and a warming support and love. After all, they are your closest family.

There are people who think that their responsibility for his/her child ends when the child reaches the age of eighteen, but there are <sup>of</sup> ~~are~~ others who say that this responsibility never ends. Both ways may be correct, because each parent raise his/her kid on a way they think is correct.

Pros and cons of those who say that their responsibility ends with eighteen years <sup>of</sup> their kid, are that this kid would learn <sup>of</sup> ~~to be~~ how to be <sup>of</sup> responsible and take care of himself, without depending on parents. This is a good thing if he/her is working somewhere far from home. Bad thing is that there are some people who don't want to take care for their kids. In the other hand, there are others who say that this responsibility never ends. Those are people who like to know everything about their kids life. They want to be a part of it. There are also advantages and disadvantages from it. Advantages are that their child can always count on them to help him/her. They will always be there to help, no matter what. But there are also some disadvantages. These kids will never be on their own, they can not live without someone who will tell them what to do, or how to do certain things.

My opinion is that parents responsibility never ends, even if we were older than now. They will always take care of us, because they love us, and want to see us happy with our life.

Some people claim that parent's responsibility ends when childrens reaches the age of eighteen, others disagreed. This essay will discuss that topic in details.

To start with, there is a lot of advantages about it. Big number of eighteen old childrens started to live on their own. They care about (self) - themselves without help of parents. Furthermore, they can realise their ideas like going on some college, get a work, and their money. There is more opportunity to success and tell what they think. Thirdly they get some specific kind of (freedom) freedom, because they can get marry, vote, drive a car, or be a part of some important event or project where people will take their ideas very seriously. Some of them feels like young adult person who has totally control about everything.

However, there are some disadvantages. Firstly, some children are not ready for living alone. They do not want to lose parents support and care. Secondly, some of them do not take some problems seriously and they think that everything is very easy. Thirdly, children can not care about themselves. They do not know how to work or get some big responsibility because parents always do everything for them.

To sum up, there (is) are lot of advantages and disadvantages. It is true that children get a freedom when they turn to eighteen and care about themselves but they do not take some problems seriously. I think that parents responsibility never ends because they will always care about us, no matter how old we are.

Engleski jezik

List za čitopis

4

Some people say that a parent's responsibility for his child good, but other think is that bad or negative sides for his. In my opinion they have some advantages and disadvantages. Today children is too lazy, and they didn't work anything they need. Some of them are responsibility earlier and some never. Some children left parents as young students and live alone in another town for long time, but some children never the left parents.

Firstly advantages is:

I think the parent's responsibility is very good for children because they learn a lot off with his parents.

Secondly reason:

They have anything they need in his life when live with parents.

The firstly disadvantages is they also work some bad things like "like drugs, alcohol etc."

They didn't anything obligations.

In the other hand I (think) think that responsibility never ends. Today parent's are so responsibility and they work anything for his children. They help him in many things like school, job, and other thing.

I think that is very good, that is my (own) opinion. Optimism.

~~(Some people say that parents responsibility for...)~~

I would like to start my opinion with ~~(that fact)~~ fact. If you put two ~~(identical)~~ identical twins in two different countries, after fifteen years they will not look the way they would if they lived together. Some thing goes for their behaviour and goals they want achieve in life.

Since you can't have two identical twins, you obviously can't have two same persons, persons that live and think on the same way. This "person" will ~~(become)~~ become a parent one day, and since you don't have two same persons, you can't have two same parents, parents that ~~(live)~~ live, think, and raise they children on the same way. ~~There~~ There is many ways to raise a child, but the most common one is to give child too much attention and care. Make him totally depends on his parents even after he reach twenty, or much wiser ~~(grow)~~ one where child can make more decisions and mistakes. Because we all know that if you want to learn, you need to make mistakes first, and if someone is not giving you the ~~(chance)~~ chance to make a mistake, how will you know it was a mistake?

Parents responsibility for child should never end, but the way they ~~(show)~~ show it should.

Some people say that a parent's ~~responsibility~~ responsibility for his child ends when the child reaches the age of eighteen. Others say that this ~~responsibility~~ responsibility never ends.

Every parent who has a child knows that simply having a child is very big responsibility. It takes a lot of effort to take care of a baby, but also when it grows up it takes a lot of time to raise it in a right way. But there are a lots of discussions about when does parent's responsibility end or does it ever ends.

There are plenty of arguments that confirm a theory about ending of parents responsibility when the child reaches the age of eighteen. Firstly, many young people, when they turn eighteen, become independent and parents ~~(doesn't)~~ doesn't have to take care of them. Secondly, most of young people after a high school get a job and make money for themselves, and they don't need a parents to give them money for living.

There is also a theory that says that every parent is a parent for it's whole life. There are some arguments that confirm that theory. One of the arguments is that even when a child turns eighteen, it still needs a parents for living. Some young people never become capable of taking care for themselves, that's Why they need a parents to put them on a feet. There are also some cases when child is turning eighteen and finishing high school, after that it's going for a higher education and most of them need money from parents for rent and food.

All in all in most of cases parents are needed after turning eighteen, because of their experience and knowledge about living. Some old people would say that once you become a parent, you will always be a parent.

On this planet lives a lot of people. They have their own opinion about everything. Children are big responsibility for their parents. Parents give them a life. These children growing up, go to school. They need clothes, food. They need love of mother and father. Some of these children never had parents. Some of them don't know that feeling when you have parents' love. If parents love their kids they will do anything for them.

Some people think that a parent's responsibility for their children ends when the children reaches the age of eighteen. In my opinion (is) that think people who never had their own children. Who never know what means having a baby, a teenager in their house. Who never worked for someone. That responsibility never ends. When child reach the age of eighteen, it's not a child anymore. It's an adult. But it still needs parents' love. They are growing up. They ends their high school. Some of these "child" will go to the college. Some of them will go to work. But they still <sup>need</sup> mother and father. A parents, if they are a good parents, of course, should never stop care about their children no matter how old their children are.

If their child is twenty-nine years old, it's still their child. Some people don't understand what means have children and what means have someone about who you need to care. In other hand, we are only people and we are different. Everyone of us have their own opinion. Having a child is something the most beautiful what two people can have and responsibility for that never ends.

Some people tend to think that parents should gain responsibility for their child/children up to the time when they become eighteen years old, but others do not share that opinion and think that a parent's responsibility must be everlasting.

On the one hand, there are many statements in favour of the first mentioned point of view. Firstly, many people point out that parents deserve to have their own life and spare time which they cannot fully enjoy if they look after their children after they reach eighteen as such a care denies them an opportunity for fully experienced life. Secondly, it is felt by many that young people would become far more stronger and independent persons if they knew their parents are not longer responsible for them after they reach eighteen.

On the other hand, there are many who feel that a parent's responsibility could never end. The first thing many people point out is that everlasting responsibility allows children to feel safe since they know their parents are always there to support them or to help them. In addition, there are many children with various sorts of physical or mental problems and they couldn't happily survive without loving care of their parents.

There are, evidently, both pluses and minuses of endless parents' responsibility. Some will say it denies them a chance of a full and free life, but others see it as an example of parents' love at its best. Personally, I am in favour of the second statement.

